INTRODUCTION.

The Amoy dialect is one of four principal dialects which, with their varieties, are spoken by at least seven millions of people. These dialects, viz: the Chang-chow, the Chin-chew, the Tung-an, and the Amoy, extend to about one hundred miles North, West, and South of Amoy.

Of the four dialects, the numbers that speak the Amoy are the fewest, and yet it is the most generally understood of them all. It is characterized by great distinctness and simplicity of sounds. The consequence is, that a man speaking it can be better understood when travelling through the Chang-chow and Chin-chew Prefectures than those who speak the others. The knowledge of the Amoy dialect, therefore, enables the student to communicate with a large population, as he will easily learn the few rules which will assist him in mastering the distinguishing differences that mark the various dialects.

Orthography and pronunciation.

A.—Is pronounced as a in la.

Chh.—This spelling represents an aspirated ch, and elsewhere is generally written ch'.

E.—As e in grey, and in combination with a consonant as e in men

G.—As g in get. It is always hard.

H.—As in English. It is never silent excepting where it is a final.

I.—As i in pique. When used with a consonant as i in him.

J.—As in jug. Sometimes it has the sound of dz. For example, 潤 jūn, tough is pronounced as though written dzūn.

K.—as in keep.

Kh.—This represents an aspirated k, and would have been better written k'.

L.—As in English. It sometimes approaches the sound of d.

M.—As in English. M is a word of itself, and is expressed by compressing the lips, and giving the sound that it has in the initial sound of man.

N.—As in English.

Ng.—Either as an initial or a final, this has the sound of ng in sing.

O.—As o in so, when followed by a consonant as o in sock.

O.—As aw in saw.

P.—As in English.

Ph.—Is an aspirated p, It would have been better written P' It never has the sound of ph in seraph.

S.—always as s in sit.

T.—as in English.

Th.—This is an aspirated T, and never pronounced as th in them. It would have better been written T' but I wished to be in harmony with Dr. Douglas.

Ts.—As ts in its. Dr. Douglas uses this spelling before the letters a, o, and u, and ch before the letters e and i. I have discarded the ch and used only the ts, as the use of the two forms is likely to puzzle the beginner.

U.—As u in rule. When united with a consonant it has a sound very much like the o in rote. For example, in 佛^o pút, an idol, the u is sounded more like the o in rote than the u in cut.

Diphthongs.

Ai.—As ie in fie.

Au.—As ow in cow.

Ia.—Both letters have their own individual sounds when uttered very slowly. When spoken as in ordinary conversation, the accent is thrown on the a and the i approximates to the sound of y. For example, 鹽 iâm, salt, might also be written yâm.

Iau.—Io —Iu, the same rule applies to these as to ia.

Oa.—the accent is on a ; o is so short that it might be written w. Some indeed have spelt the words hoan, hoa, as hwan, hwa.

Nasals.

The small letter ⁿ at the close of a word, means that the whole word is to have a nasal sound. Words beginning with m and n, being naturally nasal, have sometimes the letter ⁿ affixed to them and some-time not.

Tones.

One of the greatest difficulties that meet the student in his study of Chinese is the tones ; and yet without a thorough knowledge and mastery of them, there can be no correct speaking of the language. This is especially true of the Southern dialects of China, where the tones are numerous and most pronounced in their character. Let no student imagine that he can hope to evade learning them, or that he can without study manage to make himself understood. A word is spoken at random in English in any tone one likes to pitch it, and it will be understood. Not so in Chinese. If a man says 猿^o kâu, a monkey, when he means to say 犬^o káu, a dog, the Chinese will never dream that he ever intended any other word than monkey. These tones are by no means insuperable. A man with a genius for hard work will learn the simple tones thoroughly in a month, and the changes in them that take place in combination will be gradually mastered by practice.

According to the Chinese theory there are four classes of tones, viz the 上^o 平^o tsiūⁿ piāⁿ, the 上^o 聲^o tsiūⁿ siaⁿ, the 上^o 去^o tsiūⁿ khì, and the 上^o 入^o tsiūⁿ jíp.

These are divided into an upper and a lower series, making in all eight tones.

In the Amoy dialect, there are really only seven tones as the tsiūⁿ siaⁿ has no lower series. The lower series consists of the 下^o 平^o ē piāⁿ, 下^o 去^o ē khì, and 下^o 入^o ē jíp. I shall not attempt to describe these tones, as I consider it impossible to give even an approximate idea of their sounds on paper. These tones must be learned from the living voice, and no possible amount of description of them will compensate for the loss of this.

I shall now give examples of the tones together with the tonal marks used in this dictionary.

	tsiū piā ^a ,	tsiū ⁿ sia ^a ,	tsiū ⁿ khì,	tsiū ⁿ jíp.
Upper series,	to,	tó,	tò,	toh.
	ē piā ^u ,		ē khì,	ē jíp.
Lower series,	tô,		tō,	tóh.

A simpler method is sometimes used viz.

	1st	2nd	3rd	4th.
Upper series,	to,	tó,	tò,	toh.
	5th	6th	7th	8th.
Lower series,	tô,	tó,	tō,	tóh.

The first and the fourth have no tonal marks. The fourth and eighth tones are distinguished by always ending in h, k, p, or t.

Whilst the seven tones are exceedingly marked and decided when spoken undividually, they each undergo a change when placed in combination. For example, 船° tsūn, a boat, is in the fifth tone. When however it is combined with thâu, a head, viz, 船° 頭° tsūn thâu, the word tsūn is pronounced as though it were in the third.

The following are the changes that take place in the various tones by combination.

- The first becomes the third.
- The second becomes the first.
- The third becomes the second.
- The fourth becomes the eighth.
- The fifth becomes the third.
- The seventh becomes the third.
- The eighth becomes the fourth.

In addition to the change of tone produced by combination, there are times when a word loses its tone entirely by becoming enclitic. Diminutives, pronouns, certain adjectives, adverbs and verbs frequently become enclitic. For example in the words hō-á, khoàⁿ-kìⁿ, lóh-lâi, poáh-lóh-khì, sàng góa, á, kìⁿ, lâi, lóh-khì, góa, lose their tones. The first word in each retains its own tone, even though in combination, because the succeeding words are treated as though they had no tones whatever.

Great difficulty has been experienced in getting the proper Chinese characters to represent all the sounds used in this book. For some there are no characters, and accordingly for these I have had to go far afield, and borrow as I could. In some cases this has been tolerably satisfactory, and in others it has been quite the reverse. In explanation of the small rings used with the Chinese characters, I may say, that when a ° is attached to one it must be read with its colloquial sound, but when there is no ° it retains its reading sound. When a character has two ; it means that a character of proper sound but entirely different meaning has been borrowed for the occasion.

In the preparation of this Dictionary I have been glad to take advantage of every assistance that was possibly available. I am chiefly indebted however to the following, viz. Rev. Dr. Douglas' Chinese and English Dictionary of the Amoy Colloquial, Dr. Williams' Chinese Dictionary, as well as his English and Chinese Vocabulary, Rev. J. Doolittle's Vocabulary and Hand book of the Chinese language, and an English and Chinese Dictionray by Tam Tat Hin. I desire heartily to acknowledge my obligations to these authors for the assistance they have rendered to me in many ways. To Dr. Williams special thanks are due, as several articles in my dictionary have been copied from his.

J. MACGOWAN.

Chinese Weights and Measures.

Troy Weight.

Used in weighing gold, thread, medicines, &c. The scruple is equal to twenty grains, the pint to twenty ounces, and the gallon to one hundred and sixty ounces. These measures are unknown to the Chinese.

Avoirdupoise Weight.

The catty is a third more than the English pound. In buying and selling, two kinds of steelyards are used viz the 百六鍾° pah lák tô, and the 百° 四° 鍾° pah sì tô. The former makes the catty two ounces heavier than the latter, and is used in Amoy when purchasing taro, oysters, and all kinds of vegetables. In the weighing of other articles, the pah sì tô steelyard is generally used. Outside of Amoy the country people prefer to use the 百° 六° 鍾° pah lák tô steelyard.

Long Measure.

The 魯班尺° Ló-pan chhioh or the foot rule formerly invented by Ló-pan is used by carpenters, masons, &c., throughout the empire. It is equal to 11½ English inches. Another measure invented by him and called the 文公尺° Bùn kong chhioh is also used by the above classes of workmen. It is equal to about a foot and a half Chinese measure. There is a good deal of superstition connected with its use. The tailor's foot measure contains 12¼ English inches. It varies in length in different parts of China.

Time.

The Chinese year nominally consists of three hundred and sixty days.

As the Chinese months sometimes have thirty and sometimes only twenty nine days it has really not so many. To make up for the loss of time, two years in every five have intercalary months inserted in them.

Measure of Capacity.

The Chinese rice sellers have two tsin measures, one contains 15 oz. and the other 14 oz. If the customer is a shrewd business man, they will use the former in measuring out his rice, and if not, the latter. The fact is, in nearly all the business transactions of the Chinese, whatever may be the standard weight or measure, they will almost invariably succeed in giving less weight or measure, unless the person buying is on his guard against being cheated.
